McIVER HOUSE

By VIRGINIA TERRELL LATHROP '23

One of the oldest landmarks on the Woman's College campus and a center where much of the educational history of the state was made, gave way to progress this week with the razing of the old president's house built in 1892 as a residence for Dr. and Mrs. Charles Duncan McIver.

who dropped from a passing freight train on the nearby railroad tracks, one fourteenth of February, came to the McIver house to cut wood for an evening meal, and stayed a year, leaving as suddenly as he came.

In the house during the years of Dr. McIver's presidency, were entertained crously to the struggling young school.

Following the death of Dr. McIver in 1906, the legislature offered the home to Mrs. McIver for her lifetime. For almost forty years she lived there, an inspiration to the college she had a large part in establishing. In the later years of her life, confined to a wheel chair, she often sat on the front porch, or at a window of one of the living rooms where she could see the activity of the campus, looking out directly on the Curry Training School where the teacher program of the college is McIver House, at the corner of Spring Garden Street and College Avenue, and home of Woman's College founder, Dr. Charles D. McIver, gives way to progress.

For sixty years the spacious two-story ten room frame house stood just inside the main gate of the college, its doors wide open to students, faculty, and guests on the campus, requiring the use of two living rooms and a large front porch to take care of the groups that Dr. McIver, in his dynamic, friendly way gathered around him.

For a number of years the house was a matter of controversy in newspapers because it had been built for the use of the president, an innovation half a century ago in North Carolina. One writer charged that Dr. McIver, with a house furnished by the state, was taking boarders. The writer was not aware of the hospitality of the McIvers, who took in everyone needing shelter be it so a distinguished guest as visiting lecturers, or Valentine, the now famous young tramp the distinguished guests and speakers that he had a penchant for bringing to the college. A born public relations expert he invited every passing man of distinction to come and speak to the students, have dinner and spend the night in his home. He thus established contacts with many foundations, legislators, and philanthropists who responded gen-carried on, the program probably closest to her heart.

A teacher herself, Mrs. McIver was a woman of the same intellectual caliber as her distinguished husband, a woman so fired with the desire for learning that she took courses available to her in North Carolina in the eighteen-seventies to prepare herself for medicine. She read law with her husband. She taught art at Peace Institute while he spent time in Raleigh battling with the legislature for funds to build the Woman's College. She became head of the Presbyterian Female College in Charlotte, which later became Queens. She formed a third member of the team of McIver and Alderman on its Institute tours through the state to give teacher training when there was no college for the work. She assisted, when the school became a reality in 1891 with the planning, the furnishing, the secretarial work — and at the same time reared a family of four children.

Julia Booker, who reigned over the McIver kitchen for many years and brought up her family in the servant's house in the rear of the president's home, once said in tribute to Mrs. McIver: "She was meant for the pulpit, not for the kitchen."

The entertainment in the McIver home was famous. It was the only place available near the small campus of Dr. McIver's day, for a guest to sleep. It was a long way into town to a hotel, and the road was muddy. So the house was built large, with ten rooms, spacious indeed for the day when the campus itself consisted of only two other buildings.

Dr. McIver and his family lived in the Benbow hotel during the months of the erection of the two first buildings, Administration and Old Brick Dormitory. No provision was made by the legislature of 1891 for a home for Dr. McIver. An early newspaper clipping says that the family might have lived in the dormitory except that they felt it would mean less room for students who were clamoring for admission.

Just prior to the opening of the college in 1892, a special session of the executive committee of the Board of Directors authorized the expenditure of $9,000 for the addition of rooms to house twenty-two more students in the dormitory, and for the President's house. It was built largely of material left from the Administration building and Old Brick, and was ready for occupancy within six weeks from the time it was authorized.

Almost in the country, the college offered no nearby housing for faculty members, and the McIvers took them in, thus giving rise to the charge that they were using a state building for a boarding house. Reports to the Board show that Dr. McIver paid rent for the house, $15 a month, and one newspaper, in defending him, declared that so long as he paid his rent it was his own business whether he took boarders or not.

Two of the McIver children, Ver-linda, who died in childhood, and Mrs. John Dickinson, now of Greensboro, were born in the house. Mrs. Dickinson was married in the house, and the wedding reception of the older daughter, Mrs. James Young, now of Greensboro, was held in the two living rooms.

The back porch of the house, later glassed-in for a sun parlor, was famous for its watermelon cuttings which were held every evening after supper when watermelons were in season, to the delight of the faculty members who came from the north and were unfamiliar with the fruit which Dr. McIver enjoyed so much that he was said to have bought them by the wagon-load.

Among the distinguished guests who were entertained in the McIvers' home, and were always met at the train and taken to it by Dr. McIver and Zeke his driver and good friend, were Walter Hines Page who delivered during a visit his famous "Forgotten Man" speech in the college auditorium; George Peabody, philanthropist and educator whose generosity with the Peabody Fund helped to rebuild the south educationally, and for whom Peabody Park on the campus was named; J. C. L. Curry, agent for the Peabody Fund and such a force in education that the teacher training school on the campus bears his name.

William Jennings Bryan who was with Dr. McIver on the train coming to Greensboro when Dr. McIver suffered his fatal attack, went immediately to the McIver home to call on Mrs. McIver. Anna Howard Shaw, who spoke three times at the college and because of her interest in the college a dormitory bears her name, called at the house.

During McIver's years as president he gathered a distinguished faculty and during winter evenings they conferred around the fireplace in one of the living rooms on the problems of appropriations and of academic procedures. Among them were Edwin A. Alderman, then Professor of English, the later president of the University of North Carolina and of Virginia; P. P. Claxton, then a member of McIver's faculty and later U. S. Commissioner of Education; J. Y. Joyner, State Superintendent of Public Instruction 1901-1919; Major S. M. Finger State Superintendent of Public Instruction, 1885-1892; M. C. S. Noble, member of the first Board of Directors of the "Normal" and a member of the band of the young educational crusaders who went about the state, McIver and Alderman their leaders, holding teachers' institutes. Governor Aycock visited the campus often and was probably a guest in the McIver home at the time of the disastrous fire which destroyed the Old Brick dormitory in the early morning of January 21, 1904. Called by Dr. McIver on the telephone, Aycock inquired for the safety of the girls, then came to the college the next day and is said to have addressed students, telling them how pleased he was to find them "fully clothed and in their right mind."

When the house was built, it was heated by fireplaces and lighted by kerosene lamps. Mrs. McIver, always interested in higher education for young people, often gave a place in her home to one or more young women who could not afford to defray college expenses, and over a long period of years gave a room and meals to a succession of students at the Negro A. and T. College, always keeping in touch with them after they finished college and when a number of them became teachers of their race.

Following the death of Mrs. McIver in 1944, the house was used as a dormitory for service-women studying at the college under the G. I. Bill. It seemed particularly fitting that Mrs. McIver's home should house these students whose determination to secure an education and to fit themselves for a career overcame the obstacle of war, just as Mrs. McIver in her search for education so many years earlier had overcome the devastation and discouragement of her native state in the wake of war.

Dr. Victor Cutter

New Biology Head

By HELEN INGRAHAM, Professor of Biology

On the first of October, a station wagon bearing a Connecticut license and containing a man, a woman, two children, and five dogs came into Greensboro. The man was Dr. Victor M. Cutter, Jr., the new head of the Biology Department. It was Dr. Cutter's third trip to Greensboro. On the first he looked over the College and found it good, on the second he bought a home in Sedgefield and on the third he came to stay.

Dr. Cutter was born in Guatemala in 1917, where his father was in business. At the age of three months he came back to Boston to live. He attended preparatory school and received his B.A. from Dartmouth in 1938, majoring in Biology. His Ph.D. was earned at Cornell in 1941. At Cornell he was assistant and instructor in Botany. The year 1945-46 was spent as lecturer in Botany at the University of Minnesota. He then returned to Cornell for a year before accepting the position of assistant professor of Microbiology at Yale. He was made associate professor of Plant Science there before leaving to become professor and head of biology at Woman's College.

In 1942, Dr. Cutter was married to Dr. Lois Jotter, whose early years were spent in Wisconsin and Michigan. Mrs. Cutter did her undergraduate and graduate work at the University of Michigan. After receiving her Ph.D., she was a teacher of Botany until her marriage. The Cutters have two children, Ann who is nine and a student at Curry School, and Victor M. III, two and a half.

Besides acting as head of Biology, Dr. Cutter will continue the research he has been carrying on at Yale. With the help of Mr. Robert Loflin, a candidate for a doctorate at Yale, he transported his entire laboratory equipment to the Science Building and has set it up in the rooms formerly occupied by the division of Bacteriology which is now housed in rooms on the ground floor of one of the new wings. Mr. Loflin will spend this year assisting Dr. Cutter as well as doing some work in the Biology Department. Under a grant from the American Cancer Society, Dr. Cutter is isolating and culturing living nuclei of cells, a study designed to help solve some of the mysteries of malignant growths. Under the sponsorship of the National Science Foundation, he is isolating and studying plant rusts.

With this program of administrative work, teaching and research, it may take ingenuity for Dr. Cutter to find time for hobbies, but it is certain that his dogs (beagles) will demand some of his attention as he prepares them for occasional field trials. The planting of the grounds and garden at his Sedgefield home will pleasantly fill any spare moments. In spite of all his manifold interests, he has found time in four months of residence to win the friendship of faculty members and students in his department, to participate in college activities and to establish himself as a valued member of the college community.

NEWSPAPERMAN TURNED CREATIVE WRITER

By LOIS ANDERSON MCIVER '53

Many a newspaperman has resolved countless times to give up beats and deadlines for a big try at creative writing.

Jackson Burgess, once a reporter for the Chicago News, is one who has made the clean break and seems headed in the direction of dream fulfillment.

Burgess is beginning his new career as a graduate assistant in the Woman's College English Department in the department of creative writing.

Although Burgess has never let up in his ambition to become a writer, his experience has ranged from the battle fields of Italy to hospital work in Chicago. In 1947 he was an editor and feature writer for the public relations section of the 88th Division Army in Italy. This past year while doing long deferred graduate work at the University of Chicago he worked as a medical technician in a large Chicago hospital.

After Burgess came out of the Army in 1947, he plunged into newspaper work. For the Newport News Daily Press he covered the police courts and sports. In 1948 he went to the Chicago News where he was copy reader, a make-up editor, and a sports writer.

Burgess came to Greensboro in September from the University of Chicago where he received an A.B. degree last year. His homeland, however, is the South. He was born in Atlanta, and finished high school in Florida where he had his first job with a newspaper as a copy boy.

North Carolina, too, has some background for Burgess. As a boy he lived in Asheville.

The former medical technician and newspaperman has had much to encourage him in the field of creative writing. Burgess has won two outstanding literary awards. In 1951 and 1952 he received $250 and $1,000 respectively from the Ogla and Paul Menn Foundation for short story writing.

A Woman's College writer, Peter Taylor, on leave to teach at University of Chicago, was instrumental in turning Burgess southward again.

THEME OF FORUM

MIDDLE EAST TENSIONS

Columbia, Princeton, and Rochester Universities provided the key speakers for the sixth annual Harriet Elliott Social Science Forum at the Woman's College November 21.

"Tensions in the Middle East" was the theme for the forum, this year condensed to a one-day event.

Dr. Cornelis Willem de Kiewiet, president of Rochester University, historian, an expert on British foreign policy, acted as forum moderator. Dr. de Kiewiet was educated at Johannesburg, London, Paris and Berlin. He taught in Southern Rhodesia, the University of Iowa, and at Cornell, where he served for a time as Provost and Acting President. He has been director of Cornell University Press and the Comstock Publishing Co., a member of the E. C. A. Advisory Commission, and is the author of many works on British imperial policy.

Jacob C. Hurewitz, professor of government in the Near and Middle East Studies Program at Columbia University School of International Affairs, was the second expert on the forum program. A political analyst and expert on Israeli, he was educated at Columbia and the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He has served in the Office of Strategic Services and in the Intelligence Division of the State Department, prior to joining the U.N. Department of Security Council Affairs. He is author of the "Struggle for Palestine" and other works on the Middle East.

Dr. T. Cuyler Young, Professor of Persian language and history at Princeton, and consultant on Near and Middle Eastern Affairs, an authority on Iran, completed the panel of visiting authorities. Educated at Wooster College, Princeton University, Princeton Theological Seminary, and Chicago University, he became minister of The First Presbyterian Church in Courtland, N. Y. Later, Dr. Young went to Resht, Iran as missionary sponsored by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Mission. He has been public affairs officer at the American Embassy in Teheran and senior analyst and deputy chief of the Near East section in the research branch of O.S.S. Dr. Young edits "Near Eastern Culture and Society."

The forum was opened with an introduction by Chancellor Edward K. Graham. "Conflicts Within the Middle East" was the morning session topic. Round tables were scheduled for 3 o'clock in the afternoon, during which time the forum speakers individually and informally conducted discussion and debate. The group reconvened at 8 p.m. for the final session, the "Middle East and the West."

The student committee for forum planning included Nancy Benson '54, and Harriet Hall '53 of Greensboro; Anne Borow of Plainfield, N. J.; Phyllis Franklin, Asheville; Helen Hammond, Charlotte; Martha Irvin, Hendersonville; Dorothy Kearns '53, Greensboro; Jean Lohr, Lexington; Pat Markas '53, Morganton; Kay Neelands '54, Augusta, Ga.; Zita Spector '53, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Sally Trepke and Marilyn Robinette '53, chairman of High Point.

International Textile Show at Woman's College

A symphony in texture and color, composed of entries chosen by competition for the International Textile Exhibition, was seen when the exhibition opened November 3, at Woman's College of the University of North Carolina in Greensboro.

Sponsored by the Art and Home Economics Departments of the college, the display included articles of original design in different textiles submitted by professionals all over the country. The event is held annually and in the past has had entries from Canada and Mexico, as well as from the U. S.

The judging took place September 29 at the college, and winners received the purchase awards for woven rugs, woven clothing fabrics, woven drapery, printed drapery, woven upholstery, and printed table linens.

Alexander H. Girard, Grosse Pointe, Mich., internationally known architect and textile designer, was jury for the competition. He is a graduate of the Royal Institute of British Architects, Royal School of Architecture Rome, and New York University, and was awarded the Florence Travelling Scholarship, the Gold Medal at the Barcelona Exhibition in 1929, and won the Museum of Modern Art Fabrick Competition in 1946. A member of the American Institute of Architects, American Institute of Decorators and the American Designers Institute, he has just completed designs for a complete fabric line for Herman Miller Company, Zeeland, Mich.

Mr. Girard gave a criticism of each winning article, which he selected according to a variety of traits including endurance of materials used, balance of yarn, colors used, originality and attractiveness of design.

The articles in the exhibition winning awards became the property of Woman's College. The designs remain the property of the designers.

BORDEN PAMPHLET OF DRIED MILK RECIPES FROM WOMAN'S COLLEGE

By ANNE (CANTRELL) WHITE '22
Greensboro Daily News Woman's Editor

The 26 southern recipes in a little pamphlet just issued by Borden Company were developed through experiments at Woman's College under direction of a musician.

Pianist Evelyn Howell, who studied music at Wesleyan College in Macon, Ga., and Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, taught piano before deciding to go back to school for a home economics degree.

But cooking won over counterpoint in a big way. After the B. S. from Woman's College, Miss Howell went on to a master of science at Carolina and for four years was head of home economics at Peace Junior College, Raleigh, before joining the local faculty. She now is an associate professor in the School of Home Economics.

The grant from Borden carried the experiment in use of nonfat dry milk in certain typically southern dishes over a period of two years. The Woman's College work was far more than testing. In substituting dry nonfat milk for fresh milk there had to be compensating proportions, some change in ingredients and cooking time, and much research in any case. Both students and faculty in the school of home economics took part in the work, and in being guinea pigs. Borden retested before issuing the pamphlet of recipes and a selection of menus combine "regional favorites with sound nutrition, economy, and ease in preparation."

Miss Howell, who was dean of girls at the State School for the Blind in Raleigh a year between city school piano teaching in Greenville, N. C., and her scientific career, says that the project was not undertaken primarily with an eye to economy. She learned that there are more places than one would think, some even in the United States, where safe milk is not delivered to the door. Dry milk in those cases becomes important as it is a source of protein, calcium, riboflavin, and lactose. And for those concerned about the rising price of "milk on the hoof," there's the evidence that the dry product will yield nonfat milk for as little as nine cents a quart.

The recipes tested in the Woman's College laboratories and home management houses contained each with its suggested menu, in the attractive booklet whose cover bears the sketch of a columned southern home are as follows:

Fish stew (South Carolina style), cream of tomato soup, cream of potato soup, cream of corn soup, oyster stew, Eastern North Carolina fish chowder, corn pudding, scalloped potatoes and ham, salmon soufflé, southern biscuits, corn meal muffins, spoon bread, hush puppies, yeast rolls, white potato rolls, yam rolls, Sally Lunns, cream gravy, salad dressing, soft custard pie, sweet potato custard pie, sweet potato pie, grated sweet potato pudding, and black walnut cookies.

The menu recommended for hush puppies (and there is a footnote telling the popular version of how the hush puppy got its name) calls for fried fish, steamed potatoes, turnip greens, tomato aspic salad, lemon meringue pie, and coffee.

Mary Lou Bryant displayed samples of stationery and other items to be ordered and sold for the chapter's benefit and asked the members to contact her if they wished to order any of these.

Records of the Founder's Day broadcast, October 6, 1952, were played for the group.

DECEMBER MEETING

Atlanta alumnae met December 2, at the home of Theo (Elliott) Taylor '48 with sixteen members present.

A fascinating demonstration was provided by Miss Marie Hooper of the Art Department of Agnes Scott College. Miss Hooper created and designed jewelry and Christmas centerpieces before the club, using materials any woman would find around the home.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the group enjoyed a social hour and refreshments served by the hostess.

Avery County

The Avery County Chapter of the Alumnae Association enjoyed a delicious dinner at the new home of Laura Hall '25, in Banner Elk. Jane Guy '45, chairman, gave each alumna present a Founder's Day program to read since it was found that the program could not be picked up on the radio.

Officers to serve the chapter for the next year were elected as follows: Elizabeth Whitson '39, chairman; Margaret (Corbin) Cartner '47, secretary-treasurer.
